They lived on or near East Allendale Avenue very near the Saddle River border.

The Landscape in July 1888 reported that "Powlis Nachtigal, and his sons, have begun building a new residence to take the place of the cosey log-cabin in the woods, which has long been an object of interest on the road between Allendale and Saddle River. They are showing themselves worthy sons of those who rescued Holland from the sea by doing all the work on it themselves."

The Ramsey Journal, 14 Dec 1900, reporting on her death said, "After living here many years, she was persuaded by her sister to go on to Minnesota to live and left about October 1st. Her death occurred soon after arriving there."

About Oct 1905 F. H. Storms bought the Powles Nightengale property from J.J. Pulis.

Andrew Oblenis was a mason. He lived in Ramsey in 1877 according to Martin Hennion's will, which gives Ramsey as residence of grandchildren. He may actually have lived in Allendale, however. He (or his son) is probably the Jack O'Brien mentioned in the Bergen Index of 12 Dec 1877 as having put up an addition to his dwelling, the former old time toll-gate house on the Turnpike in Allendale. He was then keeping a small variety store there.

He and his first wife, Caroline, were listed living with their family in Hohokus Township in the 1865 Census.

He and his family, with second wife Ellen and her son Frank, are listed in the 1880 Federal Census between Corines Quackenbush and Charles A. Binder. "Andrew O'Brien" is listed in the 1880 Federal Census as a mason.
